President (2000) and Executive Committee, Washington Chapter AIA

Following graduate school, Ms. Lanzillotta was a US ICOMOS fellow to the Soviet Union (now Russia). Currently she is a partner at Hartman-Cox Architects, where for two decades her work has been focused on the restoration of some of our nations most revered civic and historic buildings and design of museums, conservation laboratories and collection storage facilities.

In 1991, Ms. Lanzillotta started the Architecture in the Schools (AIS), a program of the Washington Architectural Foundation. AIS is a curriculum enrichment program which reinforces core academic skills by teaching children how to exercise their analytical and creative skills through the architectural design process. Over 9000 students have participated in the AIS program since its inception.

Mary Katherine's commitment to architecture, preservation and service to the clients are expressed in her award winning preservation and museum work. This along with her unwavering contribution to the architectural and K-12 educational communities was recognized by her elevation to Fellowship in 2008.
