

September 17, 2006

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RECEIVED
DC OFFICE OF ZONING
2006 Sep 18 PM 2:09
ZONING COMMISSION
District of Columbia

CASE NO. _____
EXHIBIT NO. _____

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendment"

Honorable Members of the Commission:

Attached are 184 letters of opposition to ZC case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendment" which were obtained during a 6-hour period on Saturday, September 16, 2006. They were the results of an effort a two-person team standing with clipboards on one corner at the intersection of 7th Street and North Carolina Avenue, SE, across from Eastern Market on Capital Hill.

If you were to extrapolate the level of citizen opposition demonstrated by these letters to the District of Columbia at large, you would recognize that there is every reason to reject the revisions proposed to the original text amendment to ZC Case 06-06. Were this measure to be put to a public referendum, it would be soundly defeated. As public servants, you owe it to the residents of the District of Columbia to protect their interests and the integrity of their communities. At a very minimum, citizens deserve the right to have input into the future of their neighborhoods.

We know that you have seen letters of opposition from ANCs and civic groups as well as from private citizens opposing this measure. It is worth noting that many groups who have written ordinarily do not meet during the month of August when the record was open for comment and many did hold special meeting to deal with the issue because of its importance. The ANCs in particular were unable to notify their constituents of this important pending change. Many people were away from the city and unaware of the proposed change or the necessity for comment.

As we have communicated with citizen groups across the city, we have learned that every sector has had problems with inappropriate sitings or attempted siting of charter schools. The proposed legislation will make it more difficult and, in many cases, impossible for our neighborhoods to preserve their residential characters, protect their public safety, prevent congestion, and maintain a healthy environment in which to enjoy their homes.

Please recognize the level of opposition among ordinary citizens in communities across the city and reject the proposed changes to the original text amendment as set down on February 13, 2006.

Respectfully,

Margaret Holwill
Media Relations
Northeast Neighbors for Responsible Growth

ZONING COMMISSION
District of Columbia

CASE NO. 06-06
EXHIBIT NO. 91

ZONING COMMISSION
District of Columbia
CASE NO.06-06
EXHIBIT NO.91

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

201 12th Street, NE WDC 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

ALF G. JOHNS M.D.
Name

130 12TH ST. N.E. WASH. D.C. 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Araa Dem.
Name

1216 Constitution
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Johanna K Bockman

202 10th St SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

233 9th NE WASH DC
Address

20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Burt
Name

1537 N. Carolina Ave. NE
Washington, DC 20005
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Andrew Zimmerman

202 10th St. SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Jeremiah Duncan
Name

329 C St SE, Apt 4
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

 Gina Sangster Hayman
Name

701 NC Ave SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

PHILIPP DEPPERT
4530 ALBEMARLE ST NW
Washington DC 20016

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Thomas Fenske

Name

(THOMAS FENSKE)

810 E ST NE

Address

DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Stefan Harkun

102 14th Street NE
Address Washington, DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

3727 Reservoir Rd NW

Address

Wash, DC 20007

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

3727 Reservoir Rd NW
Address
Wash, DC 20007

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Jim Johnson
Name

Print Name

4336 Garrison St NW
Address
Washington DC 20016

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

241 10th St. SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place. "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Lois K. PORTER

151 11th ST NE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

D.C.
151 11th St, N.E.
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

ALAN BRADLEY

Address

241 12TH ST SE
D.C 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address
DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name Benjamin D. Diamond

136 Tenn. Ave. NW
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

MARYANN D B LEE

3916 13th St. NE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1454 E. CAPITOL ST NE
WASHINGTON DC 20003

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

11 D Street, SE
Washington, DC 20003

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

ERIK FLADE

Name

1242 G ST NE

WDC 20002

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

144 12th St NE

Address
WASH DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

144-12th St. N.E.

Address

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

3930 FIRST ST. S.E. #101
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Collin Green

Address

1220 C ST SE

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Washington, DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

MICHAEL MIGUEL
1013 MASSACHUSETTS AVE NE APT 2
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1403 2. Capital St SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1616 F NW

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name Sean Slingsby

103 8th St NE, DC
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

905 Independence Ave. SE.

Address

Washington, D.C. 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely, -

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

318 D ST NE
DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1330 N. Carolina Ave NE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Jeff Fischer

1359 MASS AVE SE 3

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

609 14th PLACE NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name Michelle R. Gia

22 7th St SE, WDC 20003
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

22 7th ST SE, D.C. 20003
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

IGNEZ TRISTAO

Name

427 4th St SE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Juan Contreras-Tirado
Name

427 4th St, SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

 DAVID SMITH
Name

1307 Independence Ave SE, WDC 20003
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this ~~Text Amendment~~, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Ken Curtin
Name

309 10th St, SE
Address
Wash., DC 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

711 N. C. Ave SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

H. McLAUGHLIN
Name

2607 DOUGLASS RD SE #402
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20020

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1114 G STREET NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1363 Mass. Ave SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

20 9th St. SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Wendy Fuller-Mora
Name

20 9th St SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1114 F Street NE Apt 202
Address Washington, DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard, through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Ann Lawrence
Name

675 E Street ; #210 ; Washington, DC 20004
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

LEE M. AULIFFE RAMBO

1428 13th St SE

Address

DC 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

218th 12th NE
Address Washington, DC

Amendment: hearings on these issues should be a matter of right to the citizens in the neighborhood.

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

123 F ST NE WDC 20002

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

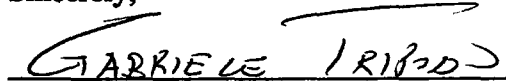

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

701 N. CAROLINA S.E.

Address WASHINGTON, D.C 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

ARVIND GANESAN

Name

439 12TH ST NE, DC 20002

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

ERIN TREAS-SMITH
Name

631 D St. NW
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Deborah Amdur
Name

335 8th St NE Washington DC 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

335 8th St NE
Washington DC 20002

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

512 14th St NE, WDC 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

103 8 St. S, E

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

127 15th ST NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

653 East Capitol St, SE

Apt. 2B

Washington, D.C. 20003

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

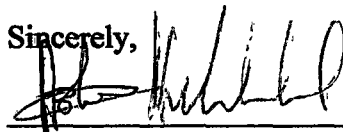

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,
Name

135 12th St, SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

K. BRIDGER

113 7th St, NW

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

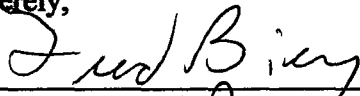

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Fred Bier
11 4th St NE
Wash DC

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that “the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools.” The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name _____

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

417 Tenth Street NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Stacy Urban

Name

250 14th St. NE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name Jelly

526 Tennessee Ave
WDC 20012

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

115 8TH ST, WDC 20003

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

329 14TH ST NE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Charles Scofield
Name

807 A Street, SE
Address
Washington, DC 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Sam Nikula Sam Nikula
Name

1318 22nd St NW #502 W. DC 20037
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Charles H. Weems

Name

1355 NEW YORK AVE NE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

139 11th Street, NE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

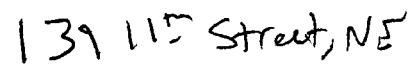

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Maay Hannon-Haley
Name

1243 Independence Ave SE 20003
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

314 E. Capitol St, NE #306
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name Robert Parker

1403 Orren St NE 20002

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address _____

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

19 9th STREET, SE
Address WASHINGTON 162
26003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

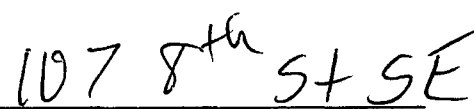

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

David Smullen

Name

David Smullen

129 12th St NE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

213-11th St, NW

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

158 TENN. AVE NE
Address
WASH DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

KARYN L. Fair
Name

319 So CAROLINA AV #1 SE
Address WDC 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

217 12TH ST NE #1

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

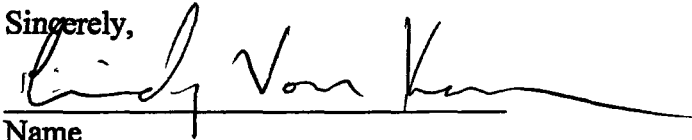

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

205 12th St. NE

Address

WDC

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

YENIE TRAN
Name

1207 CONSTITUTION AVE NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Camson Duerksen
Name

203 12th St. NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

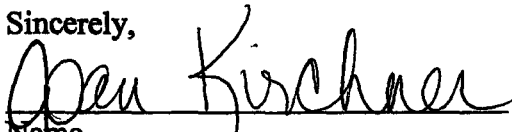

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

117 12th St. NE Washington DC, 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

111 12TH STREET NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name Roy Wright

203 12th St NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

141 12th St NE #13
Address Wash DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

11812th St NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

141-12th NE #10 WDC 20002

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

118 12TH ST. N.E.
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

133 - 12th St NE

WDC 20002

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Kelli Shimamoto
Name

238 12th St, NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

309 12th St NE
Address DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

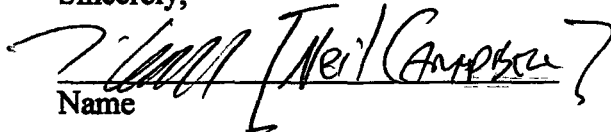

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

135 PM NE WASH DC 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

142 12th St. NW
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

117 12th St NW WDC 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

121-13th St NE #102

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name ERIC P ANDERSEN

1214 CONSTITUTION AVE NE

Address WASHINGTON DC

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

111-12th St NE Wash DC
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1214 CONSTITUTION AVENUE
Address
WASHINGTON DC

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Aune Barnes
Name

1113 Park St NE 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Katherine Morton
Name

650 Independence Ave SE
Address Wash, D.C. 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

11 8th St SE #1
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1430 E GASE, WDC 20003
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

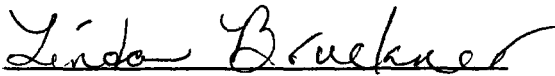

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

905 E. CAPITOL ST, SE
Address WDC

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

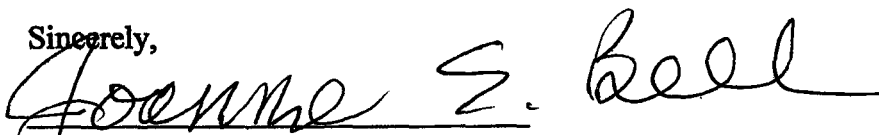

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Karen Kerr

206 9th St. SE.

Address

WDC

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Enca Swisher

Name

507 4th St. SE

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Michael Graham

10413th Street NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

128 71st St NE 20002

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

128 11th St NE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

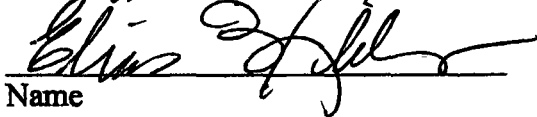

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1424 "A" Street N.E.
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

618 A St, SE 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

MARTA WAGNER
Name

717 A ST. NE 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

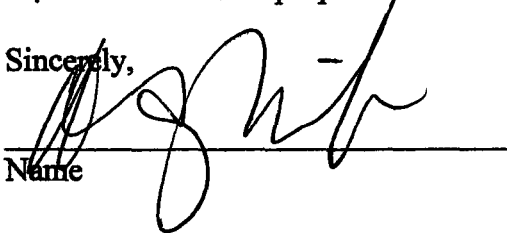

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

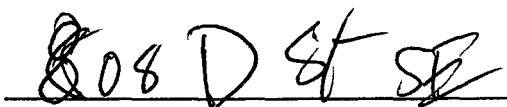

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

 MARGARET HOLWILL
Name

145 11th St. NE WDC 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

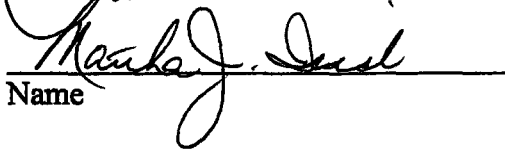

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

1208 45th Place S.E.
Address
Washington D.C 20019

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

422 11th St SE 20003

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Steve Kreseska
Name

128 - 12th Street, NE 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

N. Kelley
Name

1212th St, SE #106
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

 Howard Crystal

813 A St NE DC 20002
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

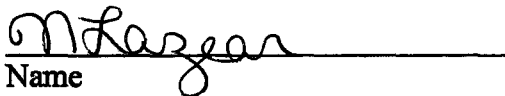

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Jo Anne Glisson
Name

1137th St SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

805 EAST CAPITOL ST SE
WASHINGTON DC 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

ANNIE HANSTON
Name

907 East Capitol St SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

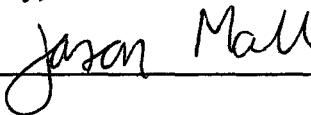

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name _____

329 14th St, NE, Apt. 2
Address _____
Wash, DC 20002

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

518 2ND STREET SE #2 WDC 20003
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth Hahn
Name

11 8 st. SE, #22
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

925 G St, SE
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

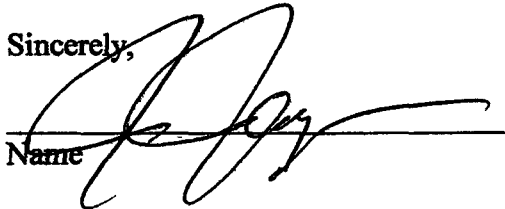

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning. on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

130 12th St NR
Address

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Diane Dewhurst
Name Diane Dewhurst

316 5th St SE
Address DC 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

518 2nd St. SE #2, WASHINGTON D.C.

Address 20003

Zoning Commission of the District of Columbia
One Judiciary Square, Suite 210-South
441 Fourth Street, NW
Washington, DC 20001

RE: ZC Case 06-06 "Charter School Text Amendments"

Honorable Members of the Zoning Commission,

I am deeply concerned about the effect that certain rules being considered by the Zoning Commission would have on my community and the City's neighborhoods if they were to be passed.

The original version of this Text Amendment, adopted on an emergency basis on February 13, 2006, and recommended to the Zoning Commission for adoption by the Office of Planning, on June 12, 2006, established reasonable guidelines for siting of charter schools. The Office of Planning report clearly stated that "the proposed text amendment resolves the immediate concern of protecting established, small-lot neighborhoods from possible negative effects of school uses without putting severe burdens on the location of new schools." The Amendments were widely supported.

The changes proposed on July 10, 2006, however, remove the very protection that the Office of Planning itself urged the Zoning Commission to adopt.

By allowing charter schools of 16 students or fewer to locate in residential property as a matter of right, the proposed change would permit residential properties to be converted to non-residential use without notice to communities and without any opportunity for citizens to comment on the adverse affects that the school might have on their neighborhoods. The Office of Planning itself has admitted that there are "possible negative effects" that may place "severe burdens" on the neighborhoods where these schools may locate. At a very minimum, citizens should have the right to be heard through the special exception process.

I urge the Zoning Commission to reconsider this change and vote to adopt the original Text Amendment as proposed on June 12, 2006.

Sincerely,

Name

Address