Subject: RE: Pop Up--what to do from here?

Chairman Hood,

As you will recall, I presented testimony to the Zoning Commission regarding the ZRR and specifically on the issue of 'Pop Ups'.

That evening I asked several questions including:

- What is the Zoning Commissions intent in addressing the issue of "Pop Ups"?
- Is there any authority vested with the Zoning Commission that addresses this issue, aside from remapping and down zoning areas with existing structures?
- Are there other means or thinking within the DC government to address these circumstances?
- Is there a need for design review for Matter of Right Projects?
 - Would this help or hurt a majority of projects?
 - Could a volunteer/ professional group be organized to perform peer design review in selected areas?
 - Would this be done with in individual Council Members' offices?
 - Can there be an incentive for a builder to engage in a peer design review?
- Perhaps in order to fully address this issue we should look at the areas that have changed well beyond what was is the current 'context' and see how celebrated and successful they are-
 - Perhaps there are many more of those. Is the Zoning Commission aware of such a study? Could it request one? I am critically concerned that any discussion of design review in this City quickly becomes the vehicle of those that are committed to be against everything, thus becoming a stifling process not an incentive process.

You stated the Commission would provide for me answers to the inquires made and I am following up to see if any progress has been made in doing so.

With every good wish, CM Jim Graham
