Hi, Ms. Schellin. I am a DC resident. I am concerned about the change in zoning requirements for future utility placement, specifically solar panel "farms" within the District. I am a proponent of solar energy. But building these large farms next to residential neighborhoods, with little to no zoning oversight, will be devastating to our neighborhoods. These requests should have oversight.

DC is a beautiful city with wonderful neighborhoods. Please don't blight it with these unkempt acres of panels which will attract insufferable heat, weeds, and vermin, driving away people from established neighborhoods. It is admirable that companies want to use alternative energy sources. But five acre plots within city limits seem to be profit ventures rather than just for individual usage.

Thank you for your consideration in keeping the DC zoning board involved in these requests.
